Madame Breshkofskaya's Address.

In response to the invitation of the Professor of Economics, Madame Breshkofskaya addressed the students of French Courses 11 and 12, members of the Faculty and their friends on Thursday, at 3.20 in College Hall chapel. Lecture Room 1 was found too small to accommodate those eager to hear the great leader of peasant education and enlightenment in Russia, the woman whose zeal in behalf of those humble masses brought upon her years of lonely exile and hard labour in the mines of Siberia. She is a woman aged but not bowed by hardships, of noble birth, of a broad education, of universal sympathies and indefatigable in her purpose.

Americans became greatly interested in her life of expiation for a lofty ideal through Kennan's recital of her sufferings on his return from a visit to Siberia. On every side she has been asked to relate her life, around which cluster so many of the most interesting problems concerning the development of the former serf, the passive being ever ready to say Nietzsche (no matter,) and who had been freed only to fall into greater isolation and intellectual darkness. She showed how their misunderstanding of the Czar as their spiritual father was being gradually corrected by books written to that end, by socialist apostles, then circulated at imminent risk by the young self-constituted missionaries—boys and girls of sixteen, seventeen and eighteen years of age, early associates of Madame Breshkofskaya, who was somewhat their senior when, impelled by a sense of duty to these peasants of her father's and of her husband's estates, she left her home to devote herself to this noble cause, this uplifting of a resigned, suffering mass of eighty million peasants. The first attempt of the little band and one to which success responded beyond their most sanguine expectation, was to teach reading throughout the ranks of these unfortunates, to train them to seek information, to awaken in them a sense of responsibility as to their isolated position, and to promote a desire for collective action on the part of villages scattered over the great rural districts of Russia. In ten years such a change has been wrought as to make owners of landed estates and the peasantry living thereon together urge local organization by which their economic conditions, often disastrous to their material welfare, might be altered, so as to enable them to accumulate reserve funds for various local improvements. This has been achieved. Now the zemstvos are petitioning the Czar for a representative government which shall give the producing classes a voice in Parliaments. Madame Breshkofskaya explained the enormous inequality brought about by the anomaly of the "bureaucratic," a world of officials, along with the Czar's enormous family, (its members number two hundred of the nobles), the army and clergymen, one and all drawing their incomes from the agricultural and merchant class. She laid especial stress on the crying need for a radical change in the form of government. It is not a charter that she favors—Russian Socialists (not nihilists) will accept nothing short of a republic.

At four o'clock Madame B. was followed to the Faculty parlor by a large party to whom a resume of the address was, on request, given in English by Associate Professor Colin. Then, to numerous questions, answers most delightfully clear and immediate were given by the distinguished speaker, who expressed her appreciation of the kind greeting she had received at the hands of Faculty and students of Wellesley College and bade them farewell in a most charming expression, in Russian, of her keen sympathy for them and for youth in general.

DEUTSCHER VERIEN.

The Deutscher Verein held its third regular meeting in T. Z. E. House on Monday, December 19. The evening was devoted to a Christmas celebration and the invitation of the committee to meet Nikolas was enthusiastically responded to. In the early part of the evening, a Weihnachts festspiel was presented, the scene of which was laid in the land of Knecht Ruprecht and his gnomes. The antics of the truant gnomes and the attempts of the jolliest Weihnachts man to be severe afforded much amusement. The cast was as follows:

Moosbach	Claire Graefe
Rumpel	Alice Titus
Graulich	Marion Stansfield
Hertzel	Emma Miller
Nicholas	Florence Cantieny
1. Engel	Nina Sage
2. Engel	Charlotte Gerhardt
3. Engel	Faith Sturtevant

Christkind. Choir of unseen angels. A well laden Christmas tree and the distribution of the contents of Ruprecht's bulging sack filled with gifts accompanied by most original German verses, took up the second part of the evening's program. The tree was quite correct historically, and with all its mythological decoration, was a creation such as only the Teutonic mind could invent. Greetings from friends of the Verein as far away as the Fatherland and as near as our last year's alumnæ added not a little to the joy of the evening.

Everybody's enthusiasm reached a climax when Nicholas, with appropriate ceremony took from the top branch of the tree a gift for the Verein itself,—a magic book bearing the name of the Wellesley National Bank on its cover.

The entertainment closed with the eating of many kinds of Deutsche cookies, and the singing of Deutsche songs. When at last we had to realize that the ten o'clock law could reach us even in Deutschland, we separated feeling that we had had a real taste of Deutsche Gemuthlichkeit.

THE STUDENT CONFERENCE.

At the conference of the Student Government Association held at Wellesley, December third to fifth, the question of holding a meeting next year to consider the formation of a permanent organization of Student Government Associations in Women's Colleges was eagerly discussed. The representatives of the different colleges voted to make this recommendation to their Associations and agreed to use their influence to bring about a second conference. It was thought that if the meeting were held in a more central place—New York state, for instance—it would bring together a greater number of representatives, not only from Eastern States, but from the Southern Colleges and those in the West, and so awaken greater interest and enthusiasm in the growth of Student Government in all sections of the country.

Without the door let sorrow lie;
And if for cold it hap to die,
We'll bury it in a Christmas pie,
And evermore be merry.

G. WITHER.

It is said that the world owes the world more than the world can pay. I do not think this general insolvency, which involves in some sort all the population, to be the reason of the difficulty experienced in bestowing gifts; since it is always so pleasant to be generous, though very vexatious to pay debts. But the impediment lies in the choosing. For common gifts, necessity makes pertinences and beauty every day. But our tokens of compliment and love are for the most part barbarous. The only gift is a portion of thyself.

But I fear to breathe any treason against the majesty of love, which is the genius and god of gifts, to whom we must not affect to prescribe. Let him give kingdoms or flower-leaves indifferently.

—EMERSON.

O Lord and Master of us all!
Whate'er our name or sign,
We own thy sway, we hear thy call,
We test our lives by thine.

In vain shall waves of incense drift
The vaulted nave around,
In vain the minster turret lift
Its brazen weights of sound.
The heart must ring thy Christmas bells,
Thy inward altars raise;
Its faith and hope thy canticles,
And its obedience praise!

—WHITTIER.

O Father, touch the east, and light
The light that shone when Hope was Sometime after vacation, we are hoping to publish in COLLEGE NEWS the music for the class-songs of 1905 and 1906. The music for 1907's class song, the Austrian national hymn, we do not publish because it is available in various song-collections. The 1905 and 1906 music, however, has not become very familiar because there are few copies in College. The music which we are to publish will be harmonized and carefully corrected by Professor Macdougall, and we hope that everyone will want this copy of the NEWS. It will be found useful sometime, even if there is no immediate need for it.

NOTICE.

Those of us who listened to Madame Breshkofskaya's impassioned argument for the enlightenment of the Russian peasants will be interested to know that a fund is being collected for the printing of books for their voluntary schools. Contributions will be received by Miss Vivian, Room 76, College Hall, before or after vacation.

Photographs of Madame Breshkofskaya can be obtained through Miss Helen Baird, Room 78, College Hall, the proceeds from which will go to the relief of the exiles still in Siberia.

COLLEGE NOTES.

Tuesday afternoon, December 13, at the T. Z. E. House, Mr. Phelps played the overture to Parsifal and gave a lecture on it, showing its composition.

The Science Club met Tuesday evening, December 13. Dr. Gamble lectured on "Correlation of Changes in Breathing with Changes in Attention."

A business meeting of the Christian Association was held Thursday evening, December 15. The resignation of Miss Guion as chairman of the Social Committee was read and Miss Helen Segar was elected to fill the vacancy. The work of the Board during the past month was reported, including the visit of the President and Secretary to Mt. Holyoke College and to the French-American School at Springfield, and the organization of the village prayer meetings. Miss Emerson told of her visit to Mt. Holyoke and the foreign school in Springfield.

The Senior-Sophomore Debate Club met in L. R. 1, Thursday evening, December 15. There was an excellent impromptu debate on the subject, "Resolved: That chapel attendance be compulsory." Miss Orvis and Miss Crawford spoke on the affirmative and Miss Humphrey and Miss Simmons on the Negative. The Junior-Freshman Club met Friday evening, and debated on the same subject. Miss Tryon and Miss Semler spoke on the affirmative and Miss Long and Miss McCarroll on the Negative. Miss Bosworth was elected chairman to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Miss Samuel.

At a recent meeting, the Trustees of Wellesley College voted to make a change in the price of board in college dormitories. In accordance with this ruling the charge for board to all students entering in September, 1904, or thereafter, will be $275 a year instead of $225 as heretofore. This change will not go into effect until September, 1905.

To all students who were in attendance during 1904-1905 and who entered previous to September, 1904, the charge for board will remain as in the past, $225 a year.

Rev. William H. Wilcox, D.D. for so many years a trustee of the College, died at his home in Malden, December 15.

Miss Dudley invites the girls interested, to go to Denison House, 93 Tyler street, to help her in Christmas parties.

December 23, 3 P.M., little children.

December 27, 3 P.M., Italian women and children.

December 30, 3 P.M., girls' club, 12 to 14.

January 3, 3 P.M., little girls, 9 to 11.

Almost every evening, parties for adults or boys. All those wishing to know more about it go to room 137.

PARLIAMENT OF FOOLS.

A MODERN MAGAZINE.

One day when lessons weighed me down,
My spirits to beguile;
I took a current magazine
And read a little while.

The story that I glanced at first
Started right cheerfully,
The heroine and hero both
Seemed likely to agree,

But trouble waited for the pair
Not two full pages over—
For while she doted on him still,
Her lover loved another.

But strenuous will the hero had.
He overcame his whim
And manfully returned—but she
Had ceased to care for him.

At their sad lot I felt depressed
Then thought, Real life, I'm sure
Is not so pleasant to review
As tales of adventure.

And so I started in to read
Of shipwreck on the main.
But all the nicest men were drowned,
The rest but one were slain.

And he lived on in Solitude
He would have died, but he
Was needed by the authoress
To prove a theory.

His fate was sad, I felt the tears
Well up into my eyes.
"I'll read one more, a happier one,"
I said, "where no one dies."

A beautiful young girl, I thought,
Seemed hopeful, but alack
I was not long ere I found she was
A kleptomaniac.

Her aged father pined with grief,
So did her fiance.
To save them from more keen disgrace
She nobly ran away.

All things which made life livable
This brave young soul forsook.
I read, and bitter floods of tears
Rained down upon my book.

A few more stories still I scanned
But all the people there
Were more unhappy far than I,
And I was in despair.

Some lived for fame, and found that fame
Was nothing after all,
And those who followed pleasure mourned
To see their pleasure pall.

Some married, and their after years
Were lamentably sad.
While others didn't, and spent their time
In wishing that they had.

A jovial humorist told a tale
But he was bitter, too,
And pathos reeked from every word
And turned the pages blue.

Two innocents at least I found
Whose lives ran joyously—
I came upon them in a field
Where they played carelessly.

But ah, alas, their joy was short
For I was weeping so
I drenched them with my flood of tears,
I drowned them in my woe.

And then with sobs that shook my frame,
And tears all scalding hot,
I gently buried them within
The modern story plot.

THE POMEROY RECEPTION.

Tuesday afternoon, December thirteenth, our new hall Pomeroy, was formally opened by a reception to the Trustees and Faculty of the college and outside guests from the Wellesleys, Newton and Boston. President Hazard opened the house to the family, informally, a few weeks ago, by lighting the fires in the reception room and the dining room. Tuesday, however, was the formal opening at which the fire in the drawing room was lighted. Mrs. Whitin received together with President Hazard and Miss Davis. It was an especial pleasure to have Mrs. Whitin present as it was her interest in the College that caused Mrs. Pomeroy to give the hall, so that our gratitude is due to her as much as to the giver whose name the hall bears.

The "family" assisted in extending the hospitality of the house by conducting the guests about the dormitory, and many favorable comments were made. The Pomeroy Orchestra, exclusively "home-talent," played throughout the reception. All assembled in the drawing room for the fire lighting which Mrs. Whitin performed, speaking a few words to the family that gathers about this hearth during its first winter. Appropriate "thoughts" were then read by Miss Davis and by a number of the girls. Miss Davis' "thought" was very pretty and meant so much to all of us because we know our comfort and happy life at Pomeroy is due so largely to her. Professor Jewett had written for the occasion an exquisite little poem expressing the various ways in which the fire ministers to human needs, but she was unable to be present, so the poem was read by Professor Calkins. All of these sentiments were cast upon the fire and were taken up by the flames, as if to shape the spirit that will gather about this hearth in years to come. The girls then sang Alma Mater and gave the College Cheer.

At the close of the ceremony the guests were served with refreshments in the dining room. Here the decoration of flowers and candelabra added to the beauty of the room itself.

The flowers, Mrs. Durant thoughtfully sent, in expression of her regret that she too could not be with us at this time. Miss Snow and Miss Lyman were the hostesses of the dining room assisted by the younger heads of the houses, Misses Southard, Rust, Philbrick and Breed who presided at the tables.

The entire reception was so hospitably and informally conducted that this first welcoming of the trustees and faculty to Pomeroy was indeed a pleasant event

WELLESLEY'S NOTABLE ESKER.

Miss Fisher, of the Geology Department, has recently been examining, with her classes, the well-developed esker in Wellesley, which marks the course of a glacial stream and presents exceptional opportunity for study. The esker is reached most readily by way of Grove street, turning into Benvenuto on the left, and thence taking the first turn to the right,—a winding road which ends at the starting-point of interest.

The esker—known locally as "Ridge Hill"—is nearly a mile in length. It has the usual characteristic features, of level top, sloping sides and winding contour. Its beginning is in moraine deposit, on the northwest, an irregular accumulation of boulders, sand, clay, unstratified drift. This broad, irregular moraine area narrows into a winding ridge which immediately exhibits characteristic features. The winding ridge has a level top with an average width of about six feet, the sides slope away from the crest with the same angle of slope—about thirty-seven and a-half degrees—on each side. The average height of the esker is fifteen to twenty feet, although it falls in some places to five or six feet. This Wellesley esker is of especial note because of its extreme winding. At one point the esker almost doubles on itself, with a near approach to an ox-bow condition.

The esker material consists of water-worn pebbles, gravel, and sand. Toward the southern end the elevation diminishes and finally disappears in a series of modified drift deposits. It thus apparently merges into a low-lying field. Several hundred yards from this nominal ending, and directly to the southward, the esker is again continued for a short distance, and merges into an extensive sand plain in the direction of Dover. The lack of continuity between the southern end of the esker and the material at the head of the plain would seem to show, in Miss Fisher's opinion, that the stream was superglacial, and that as the water flowed over the surface it ceased to deposit for a time. Stretching southeast is morainal material; and this, when followed, narrows again to a perfect esker, nearly a half-mile long and leading directly into the Needham sand plain. This sand plain has distinct ice-contact margin and distinct lobate southern margin overlooking the meadow which extends to the Charles River.

It is interesting to call to mind, also, that these formations, so perfect to-day, accumulated during the closing stage of the ice-age, when the ice was melting,—the age preceding the present geologic era. Aside from the scientific interest attached to this region, it is of itself a remarkably beautiful area of country. Splendid pine trees, first growth timber, stalwart oaks and luxuriant masses of scrub oak follow the sides of the esker; and the extreme winding of the path along the level top of the esker ridge gives charming glimpses of the region round about.

THE new Pansy Models are cut according to the latest lines now in vogue in Paris. This season they will be worn slightly longer over the hips, with less dip to the waist and somewhat higher bust.

The laced-front corset is much used abroad, and promises to be one of the leading models this season.

All Pansy Corsets are hand-made by the very best French corsetieres. The most carefully selected materials are used in their making, and every little detail is given the utmost care.

It is one of the very few corsets in which genuine whalebone is used throughout, thus ensuring both suppleness and durability.

The style and variety of models make it possible to fit stout, medium and slender figures as perfectly as if the corset had been made to order.

Booklet showing the new models mailed free on request.

TO THE EDITOR OF COLLEGE NEWS:

It is somewhat to be regretted that Miss Rouse in her most interesting talk on Women Students, while confining herself to those countries actually visited by her, should have conveyed the impression that in Continental Europe beyond Holland and Scandinavian lands "higher education for our sex" is still so very new a thing as to make courage an important factor in the mental requisites of girl students, etc

Now in point of fact, Universities in France have never been closed to women. Government with a lavish hand has provided, and goes on providing, gratuitous courses in numberless branches of learning, no distinction being made as to sex, no restriction as to nationality. Foreign students are admitted on the same conditions as are Frenchmen or Frenchwomen. They pay no higher fees for examinations leading to the various degrees. In Paris eminent professors, such as Deschanel, Brunetiere, Larronmet, Faguet, Gaston Paris, Paul Meyer, have counted among their hearers both men and women; the latter middle-aged or young, accompanied or alone, equally attentive to the subject presented. In their number have been at various times countless Frenchwomen; the "mondaine" who is often a dilettante in the best sense of that trite term; the young women, and hitherto, members of teaching sisterhoods, who must pass rigorous examinations before university juries, if they propose entering the field of public or private instruction; foreign students from well nigh every civilized nation;—all have thronged and do yet throng to the various university schools scattered through the Latin quarter, some, as the Ecole des Chartes, beyond its precincts.

But American and British students will immediately notice the absence among women students of associations, clubs, meetings, etc.; and really there has been no call for them. The Frenchwomen choosing to remain under the guardianship—nominal, but of good tradition—of her immediate kinsmen or of chosen representatives of their families. Hence they are not to be found living together in numbers away from their families.

For undergraduate work, leading to the B. A., the State provides Lycees, Colleges and Cours for girls as well as for boys. In Paris these schools do not have resident students, although elsewhere throughout France the internat prevails but is not compulsory. At Sevres, the Ecole Normale Supérieure (for women) receives yearly on competitive examination ten students in science, twelve in letters. These hold state scholarships. This school, long under the direction of Madame Favre, is perhaps what most resembles on a small scale the American or English College. It has somewhat their dormitory system, their freedom of self government and as much of social life as is consistent with their severe course of study. Its graduates stand first in line of appointment and promotion to state positions in the secondary institutions, Lycees, College, Cours, etc.

ALUMNÆ NOTES.

Many Alumnae will be glad to have the full text of the following poem by Miss Katharine Lee Bates, 1880:

AMERICA, THE BEAUTIFUL.
O beautiful for spacious skies,
For amber waves of grain,
For purple mountain majesties
Above the fruited plain!
America! America!
God shed his grace on thee.
And crown thy good with brotherhood
From sea to shining sea!

O beautiful for pilgrim feet,
Whose stern, impassioned stress
A thoroughfare for freedom beat
Across the wilderness!
America! America!
God mend thine every flaw,
Confirm thy soul in self-control.
Thy liberty in law!

O beautiful for glory-tale
Of liberating strife,
When valiantly, for man's avail,
Men lavished precious life!
America! America!
May God thy gold refine
Till all success be nobleness.
And every gain divine!

O beautiful for patriot dream
That sees beyond the years
Thine alabaster cities gleam
Undimmed by human tears!
America! America!
God shed his grace on thee,
And crown thy good with brotherhood
From sea to shining sea!

Professor Sophie Jewett has lately had the following poems published: "Song," in the June Scribner's; "Inscriptions," in the October Scribner's, and "When Beauty Dies," in the September Harper's.
